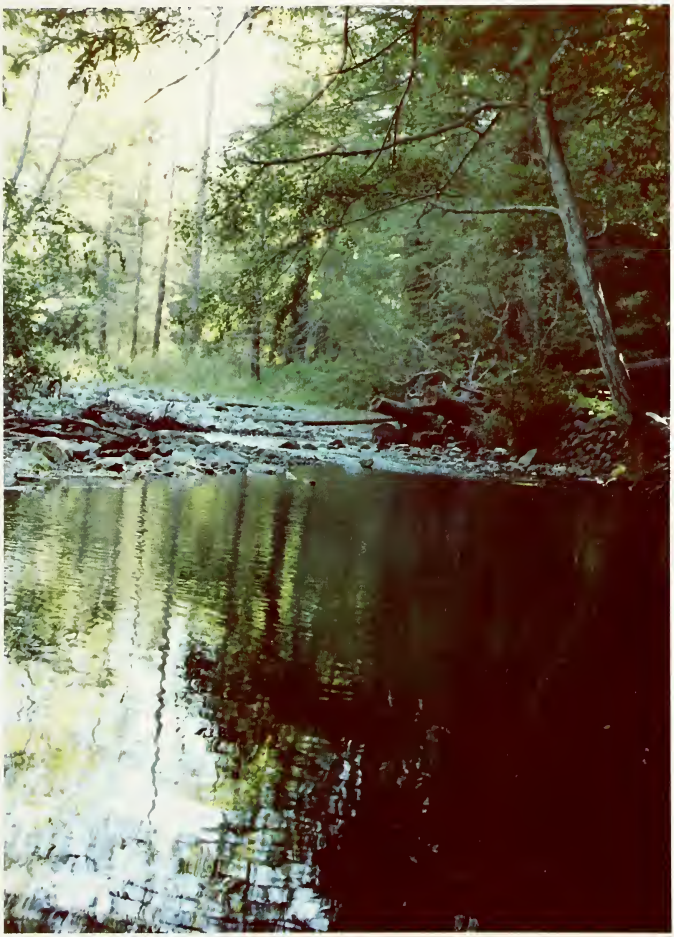
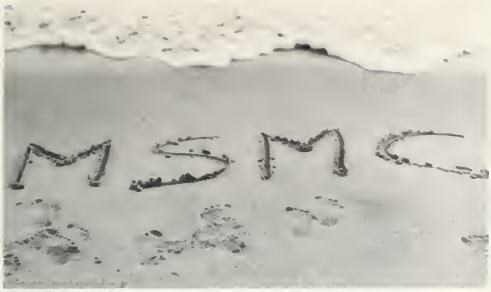
Mount Saint Mary's College



Reflecting On...

The Year 1978-79

Sensitive pictures reflect the beauty of nature in a way which reminds us to see the many miracles that surround us as we live through each day.



Looking in the light of thought, as
Emerson once saw the clouds,
Behind is beauty, while we bend, it
Ebbs in patterns, life estranged,
And roams reclining into dusk, Or
Is it we who set sundim
Upon the shore of what was ours be-
Fore we grew to fall or change?
For changed we sink, and altered rise, and
Those are clouds that were his eyes.
Far off the shapes, uncrystalized, take
On new forms with every sigh.

— Jane Sullivan —

Those Who
Made It
Possible...

President:

Sister Magdalen Coughlin

During Horizons '78 and on other occasions we have focused on the liberal arts nature of Mount St. Mary's College, as we focused last year on its Catholic nature. Elizabeth Sewell used her days with us to probe and enliven our delight in the life of the imagination and other dimensions of the life of the mind-characterized by far too many moderns as "impractical."

In reflecting on the reason that the Founders of the College must have had in folding into its birth and then into every stage of its growth this pervasive attention to liberal education, one is led to look beyond content and even beyond enjoyment.

In the initial catalog of the College, these first Mount women made it clear that they had something in mind that went well beyond the rich cultural orientation and the training in critical thinking traditionally expected from liberal study. "The purpose . . . is to offer young women the opportunity of receiving a liberal education in an environment conducive to the development of sound Christian principles." Then they proceeded to establish a form of education that by its very nature led students to questions of moment and to those larger meanings that can give birth to values that then direct one's life and action, knowing that one cannot study the humanities and sciences in any depth without delving for the meanings of reality itself. And since these meanings and their resulting principles and values take root in individual lives, it was clearly the intent of the Founders that the development of the mind and spirit of the individual student was to be the central concern of this college. Surely an education that impacts on the very direction of individual lives and thus the contour of civilization is the most practical education imaginable.

A curriculum was established, therefore, that required the study that draws students beyond chronology and data and analysis to the inevitable questions of larger meaning. Is there such a thing as a beginning and an end of time? What of eternity? What can we expect of human nature? What of divinity? What is freedom? And how free are we? Can we, after all, love?

Once these issues are addressed and meanings gleaned and absorbed, these meanings inevitably assign values. It is, then, these personally assumed values that shape individual lives by evoking one's very best and directing it way beyond the narrow, too personal, too immediate world, to the needs of others, the world, the universe.

As we reflect on these fifty-four years of Mount education, then, and the hopes and reasons that charted its growth, we thank God for the vision of these founding women — and we ask for the insight and the wisdom to chart an equally enriching, challenging, and enlivening future.

Pi Theta Mu

The Mount's service sorority, Pi Theta Mu, chose burgandy as their color for 1978-1979. The service group boasted of 56 sophomores, all with a minimum grade point average of 2.5, who pledged their willingness to represent and serve the Mount community. Pi Theta Mu helped with events such as the Presidents Tea, Alumnae Fashion Show, Christmas Concert, Graduation, and Mary's Day.

Leadership

Students at Mount St. Mary's demonstrate leadership ability in various ways. In addition to student governance, services include orientation and advisement of new students, planning of intellectual, social, and cultural events on campus, and community involvement in areas of social action.
